

Abstract

Penetrating neck trauma with a pencil in the pediatric population is an exceedingly rare emergency, with little information about the details of its management. This case report reviews a case of a child with a penetrating neck trauma and highlights management strategies and unique details in the approach when the trauma occurs with a No. 2 pencil. Appropriate management and understanding can help prevent significant blood loss and mortality in these patients.